ABOUT FOOD LITERACY CENTER

What is food literacy?

Food Literacy is understanding the impact of our food choices on our health, environment, and economy – and understanding that these impacts are not experienced equitably.

We believe that being food literate empowers us to make informed choices. We provide food education in a way that's fun, approachable, and practical.

Why is food literacy so important?

Only 4% of kids are eating the recommended amount of fruits and veggies.

In Sacramento, 40% of kids suffer from childhood obesity or are overweight, putting them at increased risk for Type 2 diabetes. These diet-related diseases are preventable — if we eat our vegetables.

Food Literacy Center teaches cooking, nutrition, gardening, and active-play classes in Sacramento Title-1 schools where students are at highest risk for diet-related diseases. Most of them are food and nutrition insecure and are first exposed to fresh, healthy fruits and vegetables in their food literacy classes in school.

How does food literacy education move the needle?

Simply put, we inspire kids to eat their veggies!

We teach free cooking, nutrition, and gardening classes to 2,000 students across 20 Title-1 schools in two school districts: Sacramento City Unified and Robla.

We host free kids' farmers markets right before major school breaks. This gives students the opportunity to replicate what they've learned in class at home with their families, supporting not only the whole health of the student, but also supporting their families' health.

We bring a trauma-informed approach to food literacy education to promote resilience, joy, and wellness for Sacramento students and their families.

Sponsor one (or more!) of our Food Adventure Dinner Series!

Your sponsorship ensures that we can continue to provide programs for kids and families like our free meal kits, the Oak Park Farmers Market, and our mission.

Our Food Adventure Dinner Series is an event that embodies our philosophy of improving knowledge, attitude, and behavior towards healthy food. Our dinner series will occur three times in 2025, each highlighting a particular theme, seasonal ingredients, and our signature veggie-forward recipes.

This program is critical, because rates of food and nutrition insecurity among households with children tripled during the pandemic and remain high.
